A Note From Pastor Doug...

“Everybody's A Priest?”

Over the last couple of years, I've had the opportunity to get to know the local Roman Catholic priest, Father Steve, through some various ecumenical activities. We'll get together from time to time to have lunch and talk about some of the similarities and differences between our particular brands of Christianity. It's been quite interesting to have this opportunity, to really get to know a Catholic priest pretty well. Still, I know that there are some pretty big differences both in our practice and understanding of the Christian faith. We will likely never be able to get to a point where we both agree about everything, and that's ok. That's not the point of our spending time together and talking about our faith. No, its more about understanding each other, and being able to find ways to work together in spite of our differences.

As I've spent time with Father Steve, it's helped me to understand a bit more about the idea of the priesthood of all believers. A topic which, believe it or not, is something that both Catholics and Brethren hold in common, even though our specific ways of living it out are different. Now, I know that when we hear the word priest, we often think of someone like Father Steve, who holds such a position in a church, someone who wears specific robes and leads a very formalized worship service.

But there is a deeper meaning than that, and that is what we are getting to as we think about this idea of the priesthood of all believers. I would like for us to think about a priest as one who stands between God and others, to mediate the love and grace of God to those whom he or she encounters. This is the vision we speak of when we, as Brethren, say that we are a priesthood of all believers. This means that everyone who is part of the church is charged with sharing and ministering to the world. It's not just something that the pastor does.

As we begin a transition in our congregational life to half-time pastoral leadership, I think that it is extremely important for us to remember this understanding of the priesthood of all believers. As I will be having less time available for ministry in the congregation, we must come together to continue the work of ministering to one another and to those outside of the congregation. Everyone will need to step up, to be willing to take on the necessary work for our congregation to flourish. As we move into this time, let us commit once again to serving one another, and to serving the community, as a group, a priesthood, who seeks to extend the love and mercy of God to our world. Let us all live into our calling as priests of God.

In Christ,
Pastor Doug
